Matthew Pearl serves as the City Attorney for the City of Homestead and counsel for the Homestead Community Redevelopment Agency. As the City Attorney, he develops litigation strategies in matters ranging from commercial contract disputes to defending federal civil rights claims.

Matthew counsels municipalities and special districts in the role of deputy, assistant and special counsel on public private partnerships, public finance, procurement, utilities, land use and zoning, compliance with public records, sunshine and ethics laws. He has served as counsel for several charter review committees and municipal code reviews and has drafted government contracts, legislative items and administrative policies.

Matthew particularly enjoys helping local governments and private developers leverage their respective assets and partner in the development of projects that can help revitalize a city. He negotiated a $60 million public/private partnership to develop an entertainment complex and transit hub with a movie theater, bowling alley, arcade, and a 1,000-space municipal parking garage with 30,000 square feet of retail liner.

Prior to joining the firm, Matthew worked with a prominent South
